PEDAGOGICAL OBJECTIVES

A game of ASSOCIATION which helps to develop:

- The ability to identify, group and classify the different people.
- The capacity for attention and observation at an early age.
- Oral expression through describing the people and inventing stories about them.
- Memory.
- Visual-motor coordination through handling the cards.

ACTIVITIES

Association:

- With the cards placed face-upwards in the centre of the table, each player should pick up and place in his/her bus the people who have the same differentiating element as the one on the side of his/her bus.

Memory:

- With the cards placed face-downwards in the centre of the table, each player, in order, should turn over one card. If the person is wearing/carrying the differentiating element that matches his bus, he can pick it up and place in the bus; if not, he should turn it over again in the same place and the turn passes to the next player.

Language

- Each player chooses a person and describes them, saying whether it's a boy or a girl, a child or an adult, what differentiating element they are wearing /carrying, what kind of clothes they are wearing, etc.
- With the cards placed face-upwards around the table, a player makes a description of one of the people. The other players have to listen and observe attentively to be the first to identify and pick up the card of the person he/she is talking about.

- Once the bus has been filled with its 6 passengers, each player invents a story that links them together.
- A player selects various people with different elements at random and invents a story relating them.
- Each player chooses a person and invents a short story about them which should then be picked up and continued by another player involving another person.
